

In a nutshell, I am paying for my monthly subscription of services offered by XM-Radio. They offer myriad program options that benefit and entertain me. If what XM-Radio provides came to me "free" I could see where the FCC might want to "regulate" their offerings.

Instead, since I willingly pay for XM-Radio--just as I do my food, my car and other services--I don't understand how the FCC can regulate what they offer.

Perhaps I am ignorant. I don't see how XM-Radio is hurting anybody. If, instead, the opponents of XM-Radio are fearful of the impact on their own profits, well then, let the laws of Capitalism direct them to alter and out-perform XM-Radio. Sincerely, Kevin Olson